Conversation Scenario: Pitching the Vision

Scenario Title:
Articulating the Vision: Aligning Customers to Where We're Headed

Context / Setup:
You are meeting with a customer who's been a long-time partner of your organization. They've recently expressed confusion about where your company is headed — they've seen product updates, leadership changes, and new messaging in the market, but they aren't sure how it all fits together or what it means for them.

Your goal is to clearly, confidently, and authentically communicate your company's vision and direction, while helping the customer understand:

1. How this evolution connects to their goals and challenges.
2. Why your organization's innovation or strategic shift matters to them.
3. How they can trust in your ongoing partnership through change.

Your Role

You're a customer-facing representative (this could be a Sales Executive, Customer Success Manager, or Account Manager) meeting with your customer to discuss the company's evolving direction. The customer values your partnership but needs reassurance and clarity.

Customer Persona

- Name: Jordan
- Role: Senior Director, Operations
- Company: Mid-sized organization in a competitive, tech-driven market
- Mood: Cautiously curious — not upset, but wants transparency and clarity
- Key Concern: "I just need to understand where your company is heading and how that aligns to what we're trying to do."

Your Objectives

1. Communicate the vision — clearly articulate what's changing and why.
2. Make it relevant — connect the vision back to the customer's needs, industry, or goals.
3. Show confidence and authenticity — use language that builds trust.
4. Invite dialogue — ask open-ended questions to make it conversational, not one-directional.

Prompt to Begin the Scenario

Jordan says:
“I’ve seen a lot of changes on your end recently — new messaging, new products, even new leadership. Can you tell me what’s going on and what this new direction means for us as a customer?”
